Anzac and Empire

George Foster Pearce and the Foundations of Australian Defence

By John Connor

Australian Author

Anzac and Empire is the remarkable story of George Foster Pearce – a carpenter who became one of Australia's most influential politicians, and the man central to how Australia planned for, and fought in, the First World War. The nation's longest-serving defence minister – holding the portfolio before, during and after the Great War – Pearce saw no contradiction in being both a fierce Australian nationalist, and also a loyal subject of the British Empire. Pearce was almost single-handedly responsible for creating the key institutions of Australia's modern defence organisation: the Royal Australian Navy, the Royal Military College, Duntroon and the Royal Australian Air Force. Controversially, when he saw the rising military threat from Japan in the early 1930s, it was his belief in a White Australia and conscription that led to rearmament, preparing Australia to defend itself in its darkest hour.

Written by one of Australia's leading military historians, this book shows that to understand Australia in the Great War, you must understand the man behind it.

— Geoff Marsh, former Australian international cricketer and coach —

AU$ 34.95 NZ$ 43.95

Edited by Anthony Bateman and Jeffrey Hill

Demonstrating how the history of cricket and its international popularity is entwined with British imperial expansion, this book examines the social and political impact of the game in a variety of cultural sites: the West Indies, India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, South Africa, Australia and New Zealand. An international team of contributors explores the enduring influence of cricket on English identity, examines why cricket has seized the imagination of so many literary figures and provides profiles of iconic players including Bradman, Lara and Tendulkar.

Presenting a global view of cricket's development, its unique adaptability and its political and sporting controversies, the book provides a rich insight into a unique sporting and cultural heritage.
